- 13:45-14:30 Presentation Lidewijde de Jong (University of Groningen), “Presenting MARE: a new project on Mortuary Archaeology in the Roman East”
Abstract: In the Roman provinces of the Near East some people never passed away completely. Memories of the deceased were prolonged after death through portraits and epitaphs, monumental stone coffins, and roadside tombs. We know that these forms of displaying the dead had arrived through the cultural networks of the Roman Empire, but so far, we have failed to grasp how they were embedded in mortuary rituals. This NWO-funded project (VICI) incorporates the mortuary context in the debate on culture change, and investigates how the dead were mobilized in ongoing negotiations between the global (empire-wide) and the local.
